Illness Prevents Crown Prince
Gustaf Adolf From Joining Celebration

SON TAKES HIS PLACE

Crown Prince's Illness is Described as Recurrence of Kidney Ailment

WILMINGTON, Del., June 27.—Ceremonies commemorating the 300th anniversary of the landing of the Swedes in this country, were delayed today when the storm-buffed liner Kungsholm, bearing members of the Swedish royal family, failed to dock on schedule.

President Roosevelt, who had been scheduled to make the principal address at 10 a. m., stood by at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene D. Pont, awaiting the word that would send him out into a driving rain that was sweeping over Wilmington.

The Navy Yard, in touch with the Kungsholm, again confirmed earlier advice that Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf was too ill from a kidney ailment that he would not be able to participate in the ceremonies.

WILMINGTON, Del., June 27.—(INS)—Here in territory once known as "New Sweden," President Roosevelt joined today with members of the Swedish royal family in commemorating the 300th anniversary of the landing of a hardy, and pioneering little band of Swedes and Finns.

Illness prevented Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf from joining hands with the President in a gesture of international amity at "The Rocks" where the first group of adventurous Swedes touched American soil back in 1638. With his father ordered by a physician to remain aboard the liner Kungsholm, Prince Bertil, 26, took his father's place and with Crown Princess Louise represented their country.

The Crown Prince's ailment was described by Dr. William F. Boström, Swedish Minister, as a recurrence of a kidney ailment.

Fully appreciating the significance of this historic occasion, Americans were noting another gesture of amity that President Roosevelt undertook last night.

That was his overnight stay as a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene duPont, members of the famous Delaware family once branded by the President as "economic royalists" and parents of Ethel duPont, who married Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., almost a year ago to the day.

The Chief Executive made a Sunday afternoon run up from Washington to spend the night with the Eugene duPonts at their suburban home, "The Owl's Nest," where, on June 30, 1937, Franklin Jr., and Ethel held the wedding reception that signified a marital union of these two politically-opposed first families.

SEE EUROPE FACING MOST CRITICAL PERIOD

British Leaders Say Situation
Is Gravest in Post-War History

WAR CAN BE AVERTED

By Kingsbury Smith
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
(Copyright, 1938)

LONDON, June 25.—(INS)—High-ranking members of the British Government, led by Premier Neville Chamberlain, hold the belief that the next 18 months will be the most critical in the post-war history of Europe, it was learned today.

If war can be averted during the next 18 months, the British statesmen believe it will be possible to bring about a new era of lasting peace in the old world.

This belief was based on the contention that Great Britain will then possess such a powerful fighting force, and its people will be so ready for war, that no European power, or combination of powers, could challenge its position.

Bristolians Are Wed In Ceremony Here On Sunday

The attendants were Miss Theresa Whyno, Logan street, maid of honor, Miss Santa Branca, Philadelphia, and Miss Angelina Indelicato, Bristol, bridesmaids. Santa Mastriani and Joseph Nocito, Franklin street, served as best men.

The gown worn by the bride was of white satin, form-fitting, bodice featuring a lace yoke, princess collar, with rose trimming at neckline. The sleeves were long and tight, full at shoulder, with the lace yoke forming part of the sleeve, and ending in a point at the hand. The full skirt ended in a long train. The long bridal veil of tulle, and face veil to waist, were attached to a spray of tiny lilies. Her sandals were of white linen, and she carried an arm bouquet of white roses and lilies-of-the-valley.

Claims That "The Cross Is
The Mark of The Beast"

Wearing blue denim overalls, light blue seersucker coat with a shirt with short sleeves and low neck, a self-styled preacher of religion spent the night here as a guest at the Municipal Building.

Bare-footed and with gray-tinged hair and beard, this roving preacher, named Elimelech Lerner, attracted much attention as he arrived in town early last evening. Pinned to the left lapel of his coat was a sign reading "The Cross is the Mark of the Beast."

Lerner, in discussing his religion, says that he is undenominational. "I am especially warning against the false Christ who is due to come to Jerusalem soon, and will succeed in deceiving the multitudes, and then will demand that everyone permit a cross to be imprinted on the hand or forehead."

Lerner has journeyed thousands of miles across the country, carrying his peculiar religion into villages and towns. He says he was born an atheist and was brought by his parents to this country when five years of age, from Russia. After arriving at New York the family settled in Southern New Jersey, and then 12 years ago he went to California. He is now 63, and 36 years ago married, but was divorced three years later. He followed watch-making as a trade, and left California two years ago.

"Twelve years ago I found the Lord and I now rejoice over my complete emancipation from both the nature and power of sin."

Questioned as to how he made a living, Lerner replied, "The Lord provides for me. People give me money but I never solicit it. I have a little money with me. I could buy a good bed tonight, but I thought I would stay here and in this way can make my money go as far as it can."

Washington, June 25. SOME months ago, in an article in The Saturday Evening Post, Mr. Alva Johnson stated what a good many people in Washington believed, that Mr. Roosevelt's radio addresses were written mainly by Mr. Corcoran; whom the President jokingly calls "Tommy The Cork." One occasion when Mr. Corcoran more or less boasted of the fact was cited.

WHETHER this is so or not, certainly there runs through the entire series of twelve a common thread. They are linked and stamped by a procedure which the more advanced of the young radicals close to the President, such as Mr. Corcoran, have used consistently from the start. Invariably they dwell upon the high intelligence of the people to whom Mr. Roosevelt especially appeals and then proceed to deal with them as though they had no intelligence at all.

PRETENDING to appeal to the reason of his great audiences, the President's radio talks are aimed almost exclusively at their emotions. Depending upon the charm of his voice and the picture of himself in the popular mind as the shining champion of the toilers, apparently his utterances are made in the belief that the great bulk of the people are incapable of grasping the discrepancies and contradictions when addressed through the ear, and that those who do grasp them can be disposed of by denunciation. The success with which he has operated along these lines is not much of a tribute

"BUT NEVER SURRENDERS"

Some thoughtful soul suggested to Frank E. Cooney of Albany, 92-year-old state adjutant of the G. A. R., that the Civil War veterans' 1938 New York state encampment at Rochester might be their last one.

"Who told you that?" demanded Mr. Cooney, puffing his cigar beligerently. "We already have an invitation to go to Saratoga next year, and I'll be darned if we don't."

At least, the newspaper correspondent quoted Adjutant Cooney as saying "darned." So we shall take the correspondent's word for it with reservations.

Regardless of Adjutant Cooney's precise choice of expletives, we are willing to lay reasonable odds on this prediction: that the G. A. R. veterans—even a smaller group than this year's little band—will meet in state encampments next year; and that a still tinier band of old soldiers will meet in 1940.

But the time is not far distant when the "last man" must salute his absent comrades in the last encampment. After that the G. A. R. will march only in the reverent memory of newer generations. Here is an Old Guard which never surrenders and gives death, itself, a fight to the last barricade.

COMPLETE DIARIST

How to keep a diary without using paper or pen or pencil or typewriter or even an amanuensis, how to preserve for posterity every detail of your daily life without actually setting down one notation—this is a process the secret of which has been discovered by Prince Louis Ferdinand of Germany who cheerfully passes on his system to whoever can make use of it.

The prince, grandson of the former Kaiser Wilhelm, is in the United States on a round-the-world honeymoon trip with his bride, the former Grand Duchess Kyra of Russia. Asked if he and his wife are annoyed by the omnipresent newspaper lads and ladies, the amiable young Hohenzollern replied:

"Oh, we like it. You have no idea how much work it saves us. We want a diary of our trip and if it weren't for photographers and reporters just think of the work and time we would have to spend writing down our impressions day by day. As it is we just tell them to the reporters—and then clip the newspapers."

Now, is that not a graceful way to accept one of the lesser blessings of celebrity?

John Matthews died recently in Doylestown. The room which he occupied was afterwards cleaned out, and the carpet taken up. Under the stove was an oil cloth and under the oil cloth a pocket book nailed fast to the floor. In the pocket book was found the will of the deceased, John Matthews, and promissory notes amounting to nearly $1,000 in value. No executor was named in the will, and ex-Sheriff Purdy has taken out letters of administration.

The recent cold weather has made ice upon the Neshaminy about four inches in thickness, and the ice-men have seized the first opportunity to fill their houses. The young people

SYNOPSIS

Ned Holden, returning to Bangkok, Siam, from a dangerous mission into the Annamite country, seems a typical American tourist. Son of a Yankee mother and an American missionary, Ned had been reared by native nurses and had spoken the native languages before his own. Officially an ethnologist, actually he is a secret service man for the King of Siam. Virginia Griffin, just arrived in Bangkok with her father, noted art collector, and André Chambon, a young French vicomte who is Griffin's secretary and Virginia's fiancé. Soon thereafter Holden is told of the theft of the famous Emerald Buddha from the royal temple. It must be restored to its shrine before the Siamese winter festival. Griffin is under suspicion. . . . Holden, under protest, consents to investigate and, next day, searches the Griffin rooms at the hotel. Virginia returns unexpectedly and finds him there. He must allow the girl he already loves to believe him a common thief. Virginia lets him go and mentions the incident to no one. Next morning, the Griffin party leaves for the interior of French Indo-China, with the ancient city of Laos as their goal. On recommendation of the French governor a supposed Laotian headman named T'Fan has been hired as interpreter. The latter is Holden in disguise. That night an arrow is shot into the camp from the forest; a warning from the Kha tribesmen that the Griffin party should turn back. Next morning Holden watches the coolie Pu-Bow whom he has recognized as a Laotian baron in disguise. He also distrusts old Nokka who had been hired as maid for Virginia. Chambon tells Virginia of a wondrous bronze jar he hopes to secure for her father's collection. Angered by Chambon's fanatical interest in oriental customs, Virginia repulses his advances.

CHAPTER XI

In two hours the caravan crossed the Laotian frontier. At once there was color and life and charm. The villages nestled in lovely river valleys—quaint, stilt-built houses, a bearded Chinese store, a moss-grown rice mill, and always a decorated pagoda with its stone Buddha to bless the little fields.

True, those fields were besieged by jungle, waging guerilla warfare day and night. Often the sambar and the wild pig raided the scanty crops, and sometimes an old rogue elephant stripped the banana gardens and trampled down the trees. But the villagers laughed the days away without thought of tomorrow. Still they sang over the rice wine as in the days of Chow See Veet, told tales in the joss-house, made love in the sunlight, and gathered flowers as offerings to their unheeding gods.

At one village the travelers found an open-air native market in full blast. It was the most colorful scene in Virginia's experience—yellow-robed priests with shaven heads; flute-players, jugglers, and devil-dancers; all but naked Khass lingering shyly at the outskirts of the throng, as though ready to dart away to their jungle lairs; Meuw horse-traders from somewhere beyond, tall, slant-eyed men each in a blue robe adorned with a red sash, and coils of silver wire about his neck.

On display in the stalls were all the luxuries of the country: stone jars of rice wine, boxes of opium, Burma cheroots; sticky sweets and rice cakes; screened boxes of big beetles, an especial delicacy to the Laotian palate; wild honey; new-killed jungle fowl and venison; a ruby-colored jelly which Virginia thought at first was congealed fruit-juice until she learned, with something of a shock, to the contrary. There was jade from China, little gods in ivory, embroidered shawls and heavy silk sarongs, almost everything imaginable from flawed rubies out of Burma to alarm-clocks from Connecticut.

It was an old story to Ned, but ever new; and he could remember few things more pleasant than showing it all to Virginia. How her eyes danced when he interpreted the talk of the stalls, and how delighted she was when he bandied jests that made the crowd roar and the young Laotian maidens hide their faces. But Chambon was in his glory too, talking French to the mandarins, and waving his arms and laughing. He bought several pieces of needlework, a copper lamp that had lighted a joss-house when the Caesars reigned in Rome, and a little figure in jade with onyx eyes and a face of incredible evil.

A little while later Chambon hastily stopped the car. Through a rift in the trees his quick eye had

They drove on, seeking more adventure—and it came to meet them in the road.

As they swept around a bend, a new-fallen tree barred their way. The drivers pulled up; instantly four little men, naked except for loin cloths and armed with small bows and poisoned arrows, sprang up from the shadows of the jungle. They were Khass from the hills. At once their spokesman stepped forward and salaamed.

"I would speak to the great lords," he said in the goblin, deep-throated Kha tongue.

Chambon turned quickly to Ned.

"What do ye want, ye forest pigs?" Ned heard Pu-Bow demand in the Kha tongue.

seen a ruined roof-tree. He led the way through stubborn vines to a forsaken pagoda, now all but devoured by the jungle.

It was a large temple, and the stones at the door had been worn smooth by naked feet, but the only life in it now was the snake creepers growing in the windows and rents in the walls, and winding and twining about its fallen columns. One battered wooden Buddha, four feet high and partially covered with gold leaf stood in the corner; among the rubbish Chambon found the broken arm of what was once a life-size Buddha in stone.

Catching his excitement, Virginia looked in the broken crypt and soon found the head and shoulders of the same image, and tore off the jungle creepers that held the piece fast.

"That was a good Buddha, once," Chambon said. "And what an interesting cross-ribbed doublet, the like I have never seen. And that face is exquisite, with its wonderful sweet smile. There, Père Griffin, is real Laotian religious art."

But further search revealed only a hand and a few undecipherable fragments of the torso.

"What would happen if we'd take that bust along?" Griffin asked. For he too was impressed by the Buddha's enigmatic smile.

"Nothing at all. You could have the crack around it repaired, make a base for it, and have something handsome. Look, Père Griffin! If you take that, will you let me take the wooden Buddha in the corner?"

"I don't want it in my collection."

"But I want it in mine. The face is sinister, with a mocking expression rarely seen in a Buddha."

"Go ahead . . . And here's a new silver coin in the dust. I'll take this along, too."

A new silver coin! Ned made no comment, but his dark eyes lighted

BRISTOL

"Magnificent" may be a much abused word, even in Hollywood, but nothing else will adequately describe "Imitation of Life," the Fannie Hurst novel which John M. Stahl made into a picture for Universal, starring Claudette Colbert and Warren William, coming today to the Bristol Theatre.

It is a magnificent production. Some notion of the scale on which this film has been produced can be gained from the fact that one single setting cost $10,000. Nothing about this set was extraordinary. The cost came about merely to make the set perfect and authentic.

In all, 48 sets were built for "Imitation of Life." One of these was a complete town house in New York City, containing 15 rooms, a real kitchen and a garden behind it. This garden was sodded and actual grass and flowers were planted there. From the garden a view of the East River was seen in the distance. Model vessels capable of operating under their own power were made for this scene and a small scale replica of the Fifty-ninth Street Bridge was erected in the background. A system of tiny moving electric lights in procession across the bridge indicating traffic in the night scene shot in the garden was effective.

LEGION JUNIORS LOSE TO NEWTOWN NINE

Newtown proved to be too much for Bristol Saturday afternoon by defeating them by the score of 5 to 4. In a game full of excitement and arguments, Bristol lost another close ball game by that one run margin. Walker and Dick were the opposing mounds-men. Each of these two boys pitched good ball. Dick, a local boy, allowed six hits, three walks, struckout seven, and allowed five runs in nine innings which is not bad pitching in any game, while Walker of Newtown, allowed but four hits, two walks, struck out eight, and allowed four tallies to scamper across the platter. Walker pitched the best game of the hurlers.

After both teams were scoreless in the first inning Newtown scored four times in their half of the second on a walk, three singles, and a sacrifice. Walker grounded out to Carter unassisted. Cooke walked, went to second on VanArtsdalen's single and they both advanced on Hennessey's sacrifice. Maher walked filling the bases. Heaton singled home Cooke and VanArtsdalen. He went to second on the throw-in with Maher going to third. Driver drove them both in with a single.

Bristol scored for three tallies in their half of the fourth. Carter opened the inning with a single to center, moved to second on an error by Maher. Folkner was safe on Cooke's error, advancing Carter to third. Folkner stole second. Dick scored them both with a single to left and went to second on the play at home. Grimes advanced Dick to third on a fielder's choice. Banroth drew a base on balls. Van Lente scored Dick on a fielder's choice, La Polla ended the inning by striking out.

Newtown ended their scoring for the day by scoring one run in the fourth frame. Wiggins hit a Dick pitch into the far corner of center for a tremendous triple. Dick fanned Walker, but Cooke sacrificed Wiggins home with the winning run of the game.

Bristol went scoreless until the 9th inning when they put on a rally. La Polla was safe on Heaton's error. Rilet, a pinch hitter, fanned, Palumbo singled and Carter singled for his second hit of the ball game thus loading the bases. Ludwig was hit by a pitched ball forcing in La Polla with the fourth run. With one out and the bases still loaded with the tying and winning runs on third and second Dick hit a Walker pitch on a line toward left field. Hennessey, Newtown's third baseman, made sensational catch and tagged third for a double play. All the Bristol boys thought it was going for a hit so they started to run, but then Hennessey made his great catch.

Tonight on Landreth's field Bristol will play Morrisville. Bill Petrick will toe the slab for the localities with Ludwig on the receiving end. On Wednesday night the boys will play the league leaders, Perkasio. Riley, who lost that heart breaker to Langhorne, will pitch them in with Ludwig again doing the catching. Both games will begin at 6.30.

second pitch sending the ball far, far away over the center fielder's head for a home run. Debokey started in the box for the Farmers but although his team mates got him off to a three-run lead, he could not hold the Italians and he retired in favor of Black in the fifth inning with a score against him 5 to 3.

Howard did a wonderful job of relief hurling holding the visitors to but one hit, a double by Mancine in the fifth inning. Liberatore and Barcalow each had three hits, while Lattanzio helped himself to a triple, homer and a single. Liberatore made the first error of the season in sixteen games.

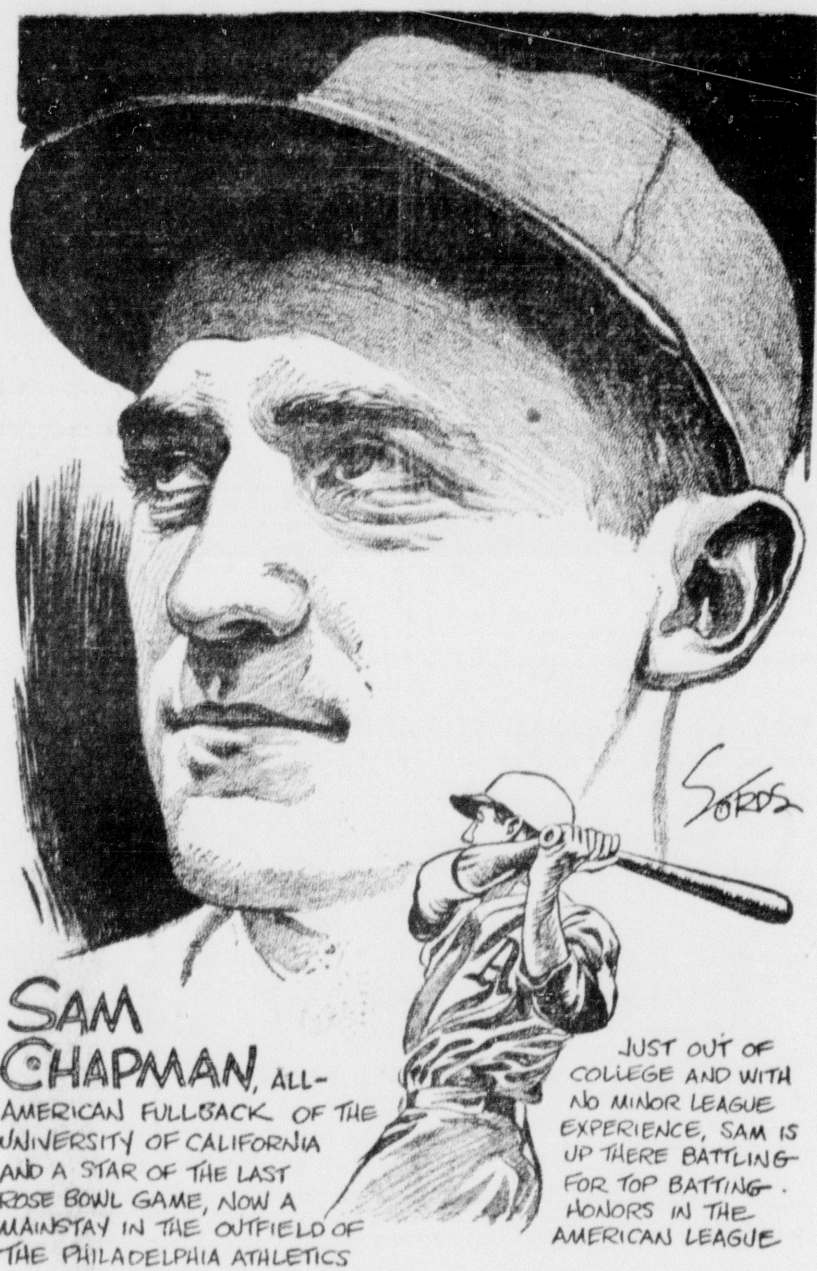

A good crowd was out to urge the Farmers on and almost everyone stayed to the finish.

Thursday at 6.15 the Pittsburgh Crawfords, members of the National Colored Professional League will be the attraction at Landreth Ball Park.

LANDRETH SEEDS LOSE TO TOMS RIVER, 6 TO 3

Landreth Seeds, playing at the high school field, Toms River, N. J., on Saturday, lost to the home club, 6-3.

Scoring four runs on six hits—two of them doubles—three stolen bases and a wild throw by the Seeds catcher, Broderick, the home team drove Holland to the showers in less than 2 innings. Al Carey was called in to retire the side after two were out, allowing six hits and two runs for the next five innings. Debokey pitched the eighth inning striking out two of the three batters who faced him.

Irons saved his own game in the eighth when he knocked down Lodge's hard smash with the bases loaded and then threw to first, ending the inning.

FIGHTERS OF NEW CLUB TO APPEAR IN BOUTS

Fighters of a new club will put in their appearance at the amateur boxing show to be held tonight in the St. Ann's A. A. outdoor arena, Wood and Franklin streets. The new club represented the Crusaders which has quite a number of boys entered in the Silver Gloves tournament which is now under way. Eight bouts will be held under the supervision of the Middle Atlantic district of the A. A. U.

Topping the card is Bill Zimmerman of the local order Knights of Columbus. Zimmerman is the first localite to enter the local square circle, representing a local organization other than St. Ann's A. A. Zimmerman's foe tonight is Jack Sterling, Roeboling.

Henry Varara, St. Ann's, is booked to meet James Horsey, Sigma Theta, in a bout which is expected to be thrilling from start to finish as both these youngsters have profited by mistakes in their first bouts here.

Jimmy Lefferts, Ontario, who has gained quite a following here, is booked to meet Johnny Yarrow, Crusaders. Joe Wagner, Crusaders, will have his hands full in meeting Reno Paucini, St. Ann's. Another St. Ann's boy who bails from Roeboling, Lester Johnson, is tackling Joe Lemmo, Crusaders.

Two brothers are also on the card. Sal Piazza, Crusaders, is meeting Like Mayo, St. Ann's, while his brother, Nick Piazza, will fight another favorite of the crowd, Steve Litus, St. Ann's. The local followers of the fight game know Litus and will be out there cheering for the game youngster from Roeboling who has joined the St. Ann's stable of fighters.

Last but not least we have Hoky Leighton. Leighton has started another winning streak. He has won three straight. But tonight may be a different story when he fights Rosel Johnson, Sigma Theta. Johnson dropped a close fight to the Croydon boy last week and is out seeking revenge. The crowd knows that Johnson can hit and has a lot of experience behind his fighting.

Many thought the colored boy bent Leighton last week but it was Hoky's fighting which carried him through. Tonight, Johnson is predicting a kayo so that there will be no question as to the winner. There are still a few choice seats which can be had provided the parties interested will call the St. Ann's A. A. club-house, 9934, before seven-thirty o'clock.

bination of powers, will dare risk a conflict with it and its chief ally, France.

There are two primary factors which lead the British to view the next year and a half with grave concern. The first is the fear that those powers who might be tempted to challenge Great Britain in Europe realize Britain at the moment is not fully prepared and may feel that if a quick, paralyzing blow is to be struck, it must be carried out before Britain is fully armed.

The second factor is the fear of dangerous, war-like incidents being precipitated by the efforts of Germany, Italy and other powers to make the most of the time before Britain's military might is restored.

This is particularly the case in Central Europe. Britain is prepared to acquiesce to the expansion of German political and economic influence in that area, but it fears that if it is attempted by force, it will precipitate incidents which will plunge all Europe into war. The danger of it being attempted by force is regarded as very great, especially if the smaller countries, such as Czechoslovakia, Hungary and others resist the German expansion.

With Britain fully armed and ready to fight, the belief prevails that Germany would be less likely to resort to force against the will of London.

Thus, by every possible means at its disposal, the British Government is seeking to avert the danger of war during those 18 months. At the same time, Premier Chamberlain is persevering doggedly in his efforts to "sell" his general European peace plan to Hitler.

He has left Hitler know, in no unmistakable terms, through diplomatic channels, that the alternative to the adoption of the British peace plan is an eventual war between Britain and Germany in which the latter is bound to be defeated.

Germany has been told that Britain already is preparing for the eventuality of such a war and that it is bound to come if the armament race continues and the drift towards it is not checked quickly.

On the other hand, Chamberlain has intimated to Hitler that Britain is prepared to go a long way towards meeting Germany's demands in foreign affairs if he will agree to a general peace settlement.

Britain, Germany has been told, is prepared to restore, on certain conditions, most of Germany's former colonies; she is prepared to condone the expansion of German political and economic influence in Central Europe, she is prepared to acquiesce to the German demand that Soviet Russia be excluded, at least temporarily, from the Western European peace pact, and she is prepared to help Germany economically and to urge others, including the United States, to do likewise.

The price for these concessions, Hitler has been informed, is Germany's adherence to a four-power pact in which she will give a guaranteed promise not to resort to war in Europe for a period of 10 or 20 years unless actually invaded.

to the character of his support but it explains it. It is an interesting fact that some of the more candid of the inside New Dealers privately concede the truth of this radio theory and, privately, discuss it quite realistically.

FRIDAY night's address was a particularly good specimen of this New Deal technique. For example, there was the avowal by Mr. Roosevelt of his purpose to enter Democratic primaries in various States in behalf of "liberal" candidates. In the same breath, he insisted that, as President of the United States, he would not participate in the primaries or make a partisan appeal. "Let that," he said, in his most dulcet tones, "be clearly understood." Of course, that insults the intelligence. If Mr. Roosevelt takes the part in the primaries he says he will, he takes it as President, and he will be potent in them only because he is President. Mr. Roosevelt and the President are one and the same person. He cannot, while he is President, enter into State politics as a private individual. If he were a private individual it wouldn't make any difference. It is the fact that he is President that makes his announcement important.

BUT, the assumption is that the people will not understand that; that they will accept as gospel the Roosevelt words and believe that he can, just by saying so, divest himself of the Presidential power and the White House glamour and enter the primaries merely as Mr. Roosevelt, the leader of the Democratic party. Nor are the people supposed to note the complete omission of any mention of the evidence that the WPA relief organizations and relief funds are being used in support of Roosevelt candidates in different States; that the immense weight of the Federal machine has been, and is and will be exerted for Administration candidates and against those who have shown independence. And they are not supposed to understand that Mr. Roosevelt's personal announcement of his political purposes releases the Federal officials handling the people's money from all restraint. If the President can divest himself of his high office and enter the primaries as an individual, why can't they? In brief, he has let the bars down for an unprecedented effort by the Federal machine, equipped with relief money, to dominate State politics. But the people are supposed not to realize that. Perhaps they don't.

THERE were in his latest address other declarations, the inconsistencies of which almost any degree of intelligence would detect. There was, for example, the pride with which he spoke of carrying out the promises of his 1936 platform, coupled with conspicuous neglect to mention the completeness with which he had violated those in the 1932 platform. There was, too, the unctuous and holy way in which he urged his liberal friends to be tolerant; to refrain from name-calling and put their trust in argument, just after he had finished calling his opponents copperheads and reactionaries and attributing criticism of his wage-and-hour law to "calamity-howling executives with incomes of $1,000 a day, who have been turning their employees over to the Government relief rolls"—a pure and obvious piece of demagoguery and class appeal.

These and other statements which will not stand up under any test of logic or consistency are to be found in the address—are, in fact, to be found in all of them. However, the top of Friday's talk was the extraordinary assertion that, though while as Mr. Roosevelt he intended to participate in the State primaries where it seemed desirable, as President he would remain wholly aloof. That was the prize piece of effrontery. If the people swallow that there really is no limit to their credulity and the New Deal Corcorans and Cohens have adopted the effective way of dealing with them—at least over the radio.
